

The alternate solution:

The high(er) speed airflow from the P-Factor along the right side of the fuselage will also cause left yaw at high power, high AOA, low airspeed situations. BUT unlike the spiraling slipstream theory it will also contribute to a left roll, just as witnessed by the airplane.

This is a more probable explanation of the forces at work than the spiraling slipstream.

